Manifesto of the High Resonant

Contents

Prologue 2

History 2

- The Old World 2
- The Great Hush 2
- The Resonance 2
- The High Resonant 3
- The Word of the Quiet 3
- The Voices 3
  - Voice of the Scroll 3
  - Voice of the Silent 3
- The Whispers 3

Echoes of the Word of the Quiet 4

- Echo of the Resonance 4
- Echo of the Silent Execution 4
- Echo of the Violin 5
- Echo of the Quiet Sea 6

Doctrine 7

Practices 7

The End Times 7

Prologue

The Quiet are not a plague. It was a Great Hush. The machines. The radios. The chatter. It was a fever of noise. The Old World could no longer hear itself. It found a way to make us quiet.

Is it still?

History

The Old World

The Great Hush

The Resonance

Everything in this world, new or old, has a frequency. Steel. Bone. Blood. Flesh. The High Resonant has found the one True Note. A mere follower may not here it for they are not worthy, however they may hear the Resonance. It is not heard with the ear, nor measured by the machines of the Old World. It is felt from within. When a soul is attuned to the Resonance, it does not silence the body. It purifies it. You no longer feel hunger. You no longer feel fear. You feel nought but the vibration of the silence. The vibration of purity.

The High Resonant

The Word of the Quiet

The Voices

Voices are the speakers for the High Resonant. They do not seek to rule them, but to tune. If you are jagged, they shall smooth. If you are loud, they will hush you. They are not masters, but instruments of the High Resonant. Hollowed of ego, emptied of discord, shaped only to help carry the Resonance into this crumbled world.

A mere word placed correctly can quiet a riot of thought. A hand laid gentle upon a shaking shoulder can still the storm within the soul. And when gentleness fails, they will not hesitate to do what must be done to silence the static. For mercy without harmony is cruelty prolonged.

Voice of the Scroll

Voice of the Silent

The Whispers

The Whispers are the many, and they are content to be so. Where the Voices carry the music of the High Resonant outward, the Whispers carry it inward, holding it within them. They do not seek recognition, for recognition is a loud hunger. They do not seek command, for command is a sharp frequency. They are the soft murmur beneath a choir, the breath between words, a presence that does not dare disturb the air. They follow the Word of the Quiet, for they may too be purified and attuned to the Resonance.

Echoes of the Word of the Quiet

Echo of the Resonance

Before he became High Resonant, Anton Vertis was a keeper of books. When the Great Hush came to be, they swarmed the library. Thousands of Quiet, screaming and tearing. It is told that when they reached the basement, they did not bite him.

They found Anton sitting in the dark, reading a book by candlelight. The Quiet stood around him. Hundreds of them. They did not growl nor snap. They began to sway to the rhythm of his breathing.

This is why the Word of the Quiet walk the lands without fear. They are not hiding from the Quiet; they are harmonising with them. We are all part of the same breath now.

Is it still?

Echo of the Silent Execution

In the early days of the Great Hush, there was a man who roamed the lands. He was strong and fearless, but he carried his rifle as though the world still listened to thunder. He laughed too loudly. He fired too freely. He said the Quiet were but beasts to be hunted and nothing more.

The man was warned often. He was told that defiance was a static to be silenced. The man answered these warnings with gunfire.

One late night, the man was captured and taken before the High Resonant. He was told he was not to be condemned for killing, he shall be condemned for refusing to be cleansed. The man was forced to kneel before Father Vertis. He fought. He yelled. He was silenced. The blade was quick, and the body fell silently. The man had been purified and had become one with the Resonance.

Is it still?

Echo of the Violin

In a looted house on the edge of a long abandoned town laid a lone violin. The windows were shattered and the doors torn from their hinges, yet the instrument remained intact beneath a dust-covered bed in a black case. A Whisper brough it back to their sanctuary as one might carry a relic.

For many nights, the case remained unopen. Music belonged to the Old World, and the Old World was loud.

As time passed, one man among the flock, one who remembered concerts and crowded halls, asked permission to play. The High Resonant did not forbid him but asked that the man listen first.

The man took the violin and carried out into the streets of old, where the Quiet wandered aimlessly between abandoned cars. He lifted the violin and drew the bow gently across the strings.

The first note was soft. Clear and beautiful. The second carried further down the long street. By the third note, the streets had changed. The Quiet began to turn their heads. Not in anger, but in attention. One by one, they drifted closer. Not running. Not snarling. Simply gathering, as though drawn by something familiar yet misplaced.

The man played louder, mistaking their approach for reverence and excitement. The melody swelled as they continued towards him. The circle tightened as he played.

A Voice stepped forward and placed a hand upon his shoulder. "Enough", he said quietly. The music stopped, the last vibration fading into the air.

The Quiet stood, motionless, for a long moment. They began to turn and resume wandering, as if nothing had occurred.

The violin was never played again. In time, a Whisper loosened its strings so that it would never hold the tension it once had.

It is told that the instrument itself was not wrong. It was too eager to be heard.

Is it still?

Echo of the Quiet Sea

On a cold, dark night, Father Vertis was making the journey back home. He had no option but to cut through a narrow street, choked with abandoned cars and the slow sway of bodies that no longer remember their names. The Quiet. He did not run. He did not fight. He stepped forward towards the crowd.

The Quiet circled him. Heads tilting, jaws slack with a low, endless groan. A groan of slow, raspy cadence. He did not fight the noise but aligned himself with it. Slowly, but surely, one turned away. Then another. Then another. The horde of Quiet parted, as a river bending around an unmoving stone.

To Father Vertis, this was no miracle. It was confirmation that he had attuned to the True Note.

Some who hear the echo say it was coincidence. Some say the Quiet had simply fed well the night before. But the truly faithful know this; the Quiet attack resistance. Father Vertis, on that day, offered none.

Is it still?

Doctrine

Practices

The End Times

There shall come a day when the last radio fails. When the last engine rusts. When the last human scream fades into silence. On that day, the Attunement.

Will you be part of the music? Or are you but the static that must be cleared?

Is it still?